This week we're taking a look back, so stay tuned to see some of my favorite clips from season 1 of TRONGuide TV.

Intro music

I'm Greg Hiltz, coming to you once again from the CCTV facility here on the lower level of the Salem Public Library.

I'm working on a pretty big show to end off the year later this month, so this week I thought it might be fun to watch some clips from last season.

This first clip is from the very first episode of TRONGuide TV in May of 2006, which featured our very first video training program, "Intro to Camera".

One of the things you might notice about TRONGuide TV is a wide variety of content. Training videos are just the beginning; I also like to show examples of videos that were produced locally using CCTV equipment.

A special thanks to the gentleman who left that message for us, I'm hoping to put that advice into practice as soon as possible. Now let's check out another station ID, this one featuring students from Jon Chinburg's class at Stevens Middle School.

AUDIO

Our 2006 Advanced Summer Video Camp produced a short titled Noodles and Cheese. The video was entered in the Alliance for Community Media “Best of the Northwest” competition, and won first place in the Video Art and Animation category.

On last week’s show we saw a video with animated still photos, created using a program called Photo to Movie. This collection of photos from my trip to the NAB trade show was made the same way.

It’s no secret that I have two children, and that they commonly appear in videos made for TRONGuide TV. Here are three of my favorites.

There’s one more video I’d like to show today that features my kids. If you’ve checked out Project Editing on the TRONGuide website, this will be familiar to you. If not, take a look right now at cctvsalem.org/tronguide. You could make your very own episode of the Super Action Stunt Show.

I’d like to leave you with a very special video featuring my dad, Larry Hiltz. In 1982 Dad rented a video camera during the holidays and completely changed my life. Earlier this year I pulled out those clips and made this little video. It kinda pokes fun at Dad, but he thought it was hilarious.

That’s just about all I have to show this week. The next new episode of TRONGuide TV will premiere on Friday, December 14th. Don’t miss it, it’s going to be a very cool show.
